The Constitution mentions none of these, either the prohibitions or the exhortations. The whole thrust for the 10 Commandments is as a personal code of morality, whereas the thrust of the Constitution is a means to control the government and keep it from becoming tyrannical over its citizens. This commandment, to never take the name of God in vain, appears nowhere in the Constitution. We citizens can swear and curse any god, in any way we wish. We citizens can swear and curse any god, in any way we wish. A "yes" vote supported amending the state constitution to authorize the display of the Ten Commandments on public property, including public schools, and establish certain religious rights. The amendment also contained a provision preventing any public funds from being spent to defend the amendment. Ten Commandment stone tablets of the Bible are the foundation for our Christian Constitution.
