Explorations in the Comparative History of Dreaming (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1999), 325 pp. The title of this fine collection of essays is not particularly promising. This volume offers a comparative, cross-cultural history of dreams. The authors examine a wide range of texts concerning dreams, from a variety of religious contexts (from China, India, the Americas, classical Greek and Roman antiquity, early Christianity, and medieval Judaism and Islam). Taken together, these essays constitute an important first step towards a new understanding of the differences and similarities between the ways in which different cultures experience the world of dreams. This volume offers a comparative, cross-cultural history of dreams. The essays examine a wide range of texts concerning dreams, as culled from a rich variety of religious contexts: China, India, the Americas, classical Greek and Roman antiquity, early Christianity, and medieval Judaism and Islam.
