The 50 Best Horror Novels of All Time. By Steve Foxe and Paste Staff ... The tale of twin 13-year-old boys, one kind and unassuming, one growing increasingly sinister, hit the perfect sweet spot ... However, The 13 Best Horror Stories of All Time avoids some obvious choices (instead of "Carmilla," the selection from J. Sheridan Le Fanu is "Green Tea"), and it includes a genre-stretching work (H.G. Wells's "The Country of the Blind," which may also be viewed as sci-fi or fantasy), as well as a classic novella (Arthur Machen's "The Great God Pan") that is often excluded from other anthologies because of limited space. I say "horror" because the stories are not at all scary. Some of the stories are written in old English-type style which makes it hard to follow. Some are quite suspenseful and build you up only to let you down with no monster or demon or murder to follow. I am trying to get through the book but it is tough because none of the stories are holding my attention.
